Journalist : Hello everyone ! Four students from Henri Sylvoz High School had the unique opportunity to delve into the professional world by meeting experts in various fields. An enriching experience that allowed them to discover exciting careers and view their future in a new light.

Encountered in the corridors of their school, the young people were happy to answer questions.

Journalist: What did you take away from these meetings?

Nathan: I was fascinated by the work of a surveyor. He showed me how, using precision instruments, he could create accurate maps of the land. It's a job that requires a lot of precision but is essential for building structures, developing spaces... I realized the importance of this profession in our daily lives.

Halid: I discovered a fascinating world with a geophysicist. He explained to me how he studied the Earth, earthquakes, volcanoes... It's a profession that combines science and adventure, and that helps us better understand our planet and anticipate natural hazards.

Mayi: My meeting with the civil engineer opened my eyes to the complexity of construction. He told me about the technical and environmental challenges that engineers face to design sustainable buildings. It's a profession that requires a lot of creativity and scientific knowledge.

Oscar: I was surprised by the role of the digital management engineer. He explained to me how digital data is used in all sectors of activity, from industry to healthcare. It's a job of the future that offers many opportunities.

Journalist: Have these meetings sparked any vocations?

Halid: Yes, I'm seriously considering studying civil engineering. This experience has made me want to learn more about Earth sciences.

These exchanges show how formative these meetings have been. The students were able to ask all their questions, discover the realities of the working world and thus refine their career plans.

Journalist: To conclude, what advice would you give to those who are still undecided about their career path?

Don't hesitate to meet professionals to discover their jobs. Follow your passions and explore the different possibilities available to you.

Journalist: A big thank you to Henri Sylvoz High School for this initiative which allows young people to project themselves into the future."
